A Very Special 4th of July (A Short Story) Pat Pritchard

After the Civil War, newspaper editor Malachi Jones has stopped trying to outrun his memories and is building a new life for himself in Peace, Missouri. He starts his own paper and makes some new friends, but it's Maggie Phillips—the editor of the rival paper, Gazette—who intrigues him the most. Maggie has her own lingering pain from the war, and she is determined to honor her late father by keeping their family paper going. Through their heated debates in their editorials, Maggie and Malachi find that there's not much they agree on, but at the same time they cannot deny a growing attraction off the page. As the annual Fourth of July picnic draws near, will they overcome their professional differences, and might they discover that the night sky isn't the only place for fireworks?
