Contents in this folder provide information regarding 2 years in the middle of the 17th century that changed the city of London more rapidly than at any other period in history. In 1665 the plague claimed over a hundred thousand victims, one in three of those in London, and in 1666 the Great Fire spread through the city destroying 87 churches during its 4 days and leaving 5/6s of the city of London as charred remains. Students will witness through hands-on documents and Broadsheets two calamitous events in the middle of the 17th century - the Plague in 1665 and the Great fire in 1666 - which changed the City of London more rapidly than at any other period in history. This Jackdaw recalls the horror and calamity of those years, with eye-witness accounts and an examination of the legends that grew out of the turmoil. Historian: John Langdon-Davies. The contents of this Jackdaw feature: Broadsheets • The Plague Hits Old London • How They Fought the Plague • Fleas and Plague • Pepys and the Plague • The Fire Begins • The End of It All Historical Documents • A letter from a Cambridge undergraduate, July 18, 1665, describing London during the Plague. • A Bill of Mortality. • A page in code from Pepys's diary and an explanation of the code. • Wenceslaus Hollar's picture of London before and after the Fire. • The Orders conceived and published by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London, concerning the Infection of the Plague. • Portrait of Samuel Pepys by John Hayls - it is referred to in Pepys's diary. Study Guide / Lesson Plan - Reproducible Activities
